

Resource for Job Descriptions

The source for this information is Susan Beaumont, who worked with the Alban Institute and is now a consultant who writes articles and books and presents workshops around the country. She has authored books focusing on the dynamics of large congregations: “When Moses Meets Aaron” and “Inside the Large Congregation”.

However, providing job descriptions and clear expectations for paid staff and volunteers is equally vital in smaller congregations.

Why bother with job descriptions?

A job description defines the functions, responsibilities and core competencies of a job

It outlines the relationships between partners in mutual ministry

It gets the right person in the right position

It allows you to evaluate performance against standards in the job description

It’s a tool for staff and volunteer development

It provides for continuity in a role when people change positions

It establishes boundaries between roles (where does my job end and yours begin?)

It establishes legal defensibility for hiring and firing

A job description is a living document, a container for dialogue, a tool for building shared expectations. It applies to paid and unpaid positions.

Components of a job description

Core competencies—knowledge, skills, behaviors, results

Effective date

The Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938 to restrict child labor and establish minimum wage, establish the 40-hour work week, with time and a half pay for overtime. It is enforced by the Department of Labor.

Exempt employees: those in managerial positions, those who direct the work of 2 or more workers, those who do special or technical work, who have authority to hire or fire other workers, who regularly exercise discretionary powers; who receive a salary of not less than $455/week.

Visit www.dol.gov for more information.

Americans with Disabilities Act, enacted 1990, anti-discrimination law. Applies to any congregation with 15 or more employees, enforced by Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC).

Any employer must make reasonable accommodations to employ a qualified person who can perform the essential functions of the job, unless those accommodations would impose an undue hardship on the employer.

Example: A blind person applies for a job as church bus driver. Does the church have to hire someone else to drive as a reasonable accommodation? No. Applicant clearly not able to perform essential functions of the job.

Example: A woman with hearing impairment applies for a job as church secretary. She needs a phone on which she can adjust the volume. Providing this equipment is a reasonable accommodation.

Performance Expectations

Why is this important?

In the church, we are in covenant relationships, a function of community and mutuality.

Failures in performance look like broken relationships and lead to isolation.

Accountability requires: Stating expectations clearly

Honoring the covenant

Pathways to reconciliation when the covenant is broken

Defining Essential Functions

These are the tasks, the WHAT of the job. They are essential if the position exists to perform the function, if a limited number of people can perform the function, if the person needs special ability to perform it. i.e., music director, keyboard person or organist, Sunday School teacher, church secretary, custodian

To determine essential functions, begin by brainstorming the tasks required to perform a role. Each function begins with a verb.

For a full-time position, there should be no more than 8-12 essential functions.

Part-time or volunteer positions require fewer essential functions.

In the final description, list requirements and functions in the order of importance.

Here are samples of verbs that may describe essential functions:

Plans and organizes	Strengthens	Serves	Manages
Directs	Repairs	Supervises	Evaluates
Communicates	Shepherds	Implements	Maintains
Coordinates	Processes	Resources	Advises
Controls	Schedules	Trains	Nurtures
Problem solves	Provides	Assists	Initiates
Designs	Equips	Guides	Participates

Examples for church secretary or administrator:

- Provides administrative and clerical support for professional staff
- Participates in all staff meetings
- Maintains the congregation's data base

Examples for church custodian:

- Maintains a regular schedule of cleaning spaces, kitchen surfaces, floors and carpets.
- Operates cleaning equipment (vacuum cleaner, floor buffer, snow blower, lawn mower)
- Arranges spaces in preparation for meetings and church events
- Observes and responds to basic maintenance needs (changes light bulbs, etc)
- Inventories and communicates supply needs

Core Competencies

These are behaviors, attributes, skills expected as a person executes essential functions of their role, the WHO and HOW of the job.

Categories of core competencies:

Personal Competencies include attention to detail, aesthetic awareness, creativity and innovation, compassion and care, ethics and values, influencing others, initiative, integrity and trust, interpersonal skills, listening, ownership of mission, resilience, self-development, self-differentiation, technical skill, time management, verbal and/or written communication
